NOW IN OUR 55TH YEAR

Broadcasting/Cablecasting Yearbook 1982

The 1982 BROADCASTING/CABLECASTING YEARBOOK shares with its predecessors the distinction of being the most comprehensive directory to the business of broadcasting. It continues to improve on its past publications, by offering new features and refinements of established ones. To acquaint YEARBOOK readers with what they can expect to find between these covers, and to assist in locating information, the editors offer this general description of the seven major sections, Broadcasting in General, Television, Radio, Advertising and Programming, Engineering and Equipment, Professional Services and Associations, and Cable.

Section A—"Broadcasting in General," begins Section A with the history and evolution of the broadcasting media. The "Short Course in Broadcasting" (A-2) provides a capsulized summary of the industry. A section on the Federal Communications Commission follows with an extract of its principal rules, an organization chart of the FCC on page A-8, and a guide to station application procedure. A directory of government agencies and committees of interest to the broadcasting industry begins on page A-32, followed by a list of state Cable regulatory agencies. The Group Ownership directory lists individuals and companies with multiple station holdings beginning on page A-35, followed by Newspaper/Magazine Crossownership and Broadcasters with Cable interests. This section concludes with tables of cable, radio and TV financial figures and a tabular record of station trading since 1954 on page A-70.

Section B—This is the Television section of the YEARBOOK. The first part, "The Television Marketplace," describes the commercial aspects of the medium, and has as its primary feature the "ADI Market Atlas," a 76-page section showing each of the 211 ADI's (Areas of Dominant Influence) according to Arbitron Television. It is complete with coverage maps, and other important market rankings. The second part, "The Facilities of Television," begins with detailed directories of TV stations with cross-references to the appropriate ADI's. Among the other features of this section are lists of stations by call letters and channels, the table of TV assignments, a complete history of TV station transfers and a list of pending TV station applications. The section concludes with tables of TV billings and TV set sales.

Section C—The Radio section of the YEARBOOK begins with the directory of AM and FM stations in the United States followed by stations in U.S. territories, Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean. Next, a directory lists all counties of license with either county or market population figures. Cross-reference lists of AM and FM stations by call letters and frequencies for both the U.S. and Canada follow this directory. Finally, the section concludes with the table of FM assignments and tables of radio billings and radio set sales.

Section D—This section is in three parts. The first, "Broadcast Advertising," presents directories of advertising agencies, station representatives, media buying/planning services and the NAB TV and Radio Codes. The second part, "Networks & Programming," which begins on page 23, contains the major network directories with radio and TV affiliates; a section on public broadcasting; directories of program and commercial producers for radio and TV, distributors and production services; regional radio and TV networks and news services. Other program-related material includes the sections on pay cable services, music licensing groups, closed circuit TV, major awards, and radio stations listed according to their formats and special programming. The section concludes with tables that provide information on radio and TV audiences, audience composition and set usage.

Section E—This, the "Equipment & Engineering" section, begins with a list of equipment manufacturers and distributors, and continues with listings of frequency measuring services, automated-channel supplier, broadcast automation systems, teletext suppliers, and a directory of companies providing mobile production services. The next section on common carriers including land line (AT&T), microwave & multipoint distribution services is followed by directories of satellite owners and operators, satellite resale and common carriers, and programmers and networks using satellites. The last part begins on page 49 with the 1982 Buyer's Guide, the yellow pages, a commercial directory to both equipment and broadcast services.

Section F—is divided into four parts—Professional Services, Associations, Broadcast Education, and International. Part one provides listings of brokers and consultants, station financing firms, research services, engineering consultants, law firms and attorneys in communications law, public relations and employment services, and talent agents. Part two, Associations, begins with the National Association of Broadcasters listing on page F-38. Other groups listed include trade organizations, professional associations and societies, and unions. Broadcast Education, part three, opens on page F-54 with broadcasting schools, college and universities and books. The section entitled International concludes this section with three directories, world radio and television, international producers, and international equipment manufacturers.

Section G—The Cable section of the YEARBOOK contains detailed information on Cable systems throughout the United States and Canada. The Cable listings provide the system name, address, and phone number; area served; type of TV market; statistical data; channel usage; TV stations carried; information about pay cable and other types of programming; and ownership. A "Short Course in Cable" and descriptions of regulations affecting the cable industry open the section. Also found in this section is a directory of Multiple System Operators (MSO's) in the U.S. and Canada which begins on page G-369.

At the top of the first page of each section is a table of contents. Through these and the alphabetized editorial index that begins on the next page, the editors hope that readers will quickly find their way to the information they most need to know about broadcasting.

of Commerce authority to inspect radio stations, to examine and license radio operators, and to assign radio call signs.

Much of the early effort of the Federal Radio Commission was required to straighten out the confusion in the broadcast band. It was impossible to accommodate the 732 broadcast stations then operating. New regulations caused about 150 of them to surrender their licenses.

Communications Act of 1934

At the request of President Roosevelt, the Secretary of Commerce in 1933 appointed an interdepartmental committee to study electronic communications. The committee recommended that Congress establish a single agency to regulate all interstate and foreign communication by wire and radio, including telegraph, telephone and broadcast. The Communications Act of 1934 created the Federal Communications Commission for this unified regulation. This is the statute under which the FCC operates and which it enforces. Several of its provisions were taken from the earlier Radio Act.

Federal Communications Commission

The FCC began operating on July 11, 1934, as an independent federal agency headed by seven commissioners, who are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

FCC Broadcast Regulation

One of the FCC's major activities is the regulation of broadcasting. This has three phases.

The first is the allocation of space in the radio frequency spectrum to the broadcast services and to many nonbroadcast services which also must be accommodated. In view of the tremendously increased use of radio technology in recent decades, the competing demands for frequencies are among the commission's most pressing problems. Fortunately, as technology has advanced, frequencies higher and higher in the spectrum have become usable. Apart from the frequencies used for broadcasting, frequencies in other portions of the spectrum are allocated for "broadcast auxiliary" use by remote pickup and other transmitters auxiliary to main broadcast stations (see Auxiliary Broadcast Services).

The second phase of regulation is the assignment of stations in each service within the allocated frequency bands, with specific location, frequency and power. The chief consideration, although by no means the only one, is to avoid interference with other stations on the same channel (frequency) or channels adjacent in the spectrum. If his application is granted, an applicant for a new station or for changed facilities receives a construction permit. Later, when the station is built and it is capable of operating as proposed, a license to operate is issued.

The third phase is regulation of existing stations: inspection to see that stations are operating in accordance with FCC rules and technical provisions of their authorizations, modifying the authorizations when necessary, assigning station call letters, licensing transmitter operators, processing requests to assign the station license to another party or transfer control of the licensee corporation, and processing applications for renewal of license. At renewal time the commission reviews the station's record to see if it is operating in the public interest.

The Nature of American Broadcasting

Although educational and other noncommercial stations share the airwaves, the American broadcasting system for the most part is a commercial system. In this respect it is supported by revenues from those who advertise goods or services to the audience. Advertising messages are presented as commercial "spot announcements" before, during, and after programs, or as a part of "sponsored" programs.

Broadcast stations are licensed to serve the public interest, convenience and necessity. Because radio channels are limited and are part of the public domain, it is important to entrust them to licensees with a sense of public responsibility. By law, each license must contain a statement that the licensee does not have any right to operate the station or use the frequency beyond the term of license. The maximum term of license is three years.

Under requirements of the Communications Act, applicants must be legally, technically and financially qualified, and they must show that their proposed

A short course in broadcasting □ 1982

There were 9,092 radio stations operating in the United States at the end of 1981. Of these, 4,630 were commercial AM's, 3,346 were commercial FM's and 1,116 were noncommercial FM's. There were 1,042 operating television stations: 524 commercial VHF's, 248 commercial UHF's, 107 noncommercial VHF's and 163 noncommercial UHF's. Most commercial TV's are network affiliated; approximately 200 operate as independents.

No single entity may own more than seven stations in each service (AM, FM or TV). In TV, no more than five may be VHF. No owner may have two stations of the same service in the same community. No owner of three VHF's in the top 50 markets may purchase other VHF's in the top 50 without a showing of compelling public interest. Newspaper owners may no longer purchase broadcast properties in the same market, nor may radio station owners acquire TV stations there, nor TV owners radio outlets. TV stations may no longer acquire cable TV franchises in the same city, and networks may not own cable systems at all.

In 1980, the last year for which official FCC figures are available, commercial broadcasting had total revenues of approximately $12.0 billion. Profits were $1.8 billion. Television accounted for $8.8 billion (73.5%) of revenues and $1.6 billion (91.5%) of profits; radio, for approximately $3.2 billion (26.5%) and $154 million (8.5%). Public broadcasting had a 1980 income of $696.6 million—27% from the federal government.

There are more than 81 million U.S. homes (98% of all homes) with television sets, about 50% of which have more than one set. About 71 million sets are color. It is estimated that about 96% of TV homes can receive UHF signals, and that about 25% are linked with cable systems, according to Arbitron Television. There are an estimated 457.5 million radio sets in the U.S., 338.6 million (74%) of them in homes and 118.9 million (26%) out of homes.

The average American home watches TV for six hours and 45 minutes a day, according to A.C. Nielsen statistics. And the latest study by The Roper Organization (commissioned by the Television Information Office) shows that 64% of the U.S. public turns to TV as the source of most of its news, and that 51% ranks it as the most believable news source.

The average 30-second prime-time network television announcement now costs $100,000 (spots on a top-rated series cost $175,000; low-rated spots average about $45,000). An estimated 105 million people watched the 1982 Super Bowl telecast. Thirty-second announcements during that event cost $345,000. Thirty-second announcements on individual TV stations range from $15,000 in top-rated specials in major markets to as low as $10 in the second-hundred markets. Radio spots cost from $600 or more in major markets to less than a dollar in small towns.

In 1945, as part of an extensive revision of frequency allocations, the commission reserved 20 FM channels between 88 and 92 mhz for noncommercial educational FM stations. This part of the FM band is contiguous to the commercial portion, and FM receivers can tune both noncommercial and commercial stations. Since then, the number of noncommercial educational FM stations has grown slowly but steadily.

In 1948 the commission authorized 10 w operation on educational FM channels. With such low power equipment, easily installed and operated, schools may broadcast to a limited area of two to five miles for an outlay of a few thousand dollars. High power equipment may be added when desired. In 1951, as a further aid, the commission authorized remote control operation of low power educational stations. Approximately half of all educational FM stations use power of 10 w.

Educational FM stations traditionally have been assigned on an individual-application "demand" basis, as AM stations are assigned. To permit planned development of the 20 reserved channels, it is proposed to adopt a table of assignments like that adopted in 1963 for commercial FM channels to allocate specific frequencies to communities.

Stations in the educational FM service are licensed principally to school systems, colleges and universities for student-teacher programs as well as for public education and information.

TV Educational Stations.—The commission allocated TV facilities for noncommercial educational use after a lengthy study in the general television proceedings (see Broadcast). It determined that "the need for noncommercial educational stations has been amply demonstrated," that it would take longer for the educational service to be developed than for the commercial service, and that special channels should be reserved. Consequently, in 1952, channel assignments were made to 242 communities exclusively for noncommercial educational stations. Forty-six of these were made to primary educational centers. Of the total 242 channels, 80 were VHF and 162 UHF. There have been more assignments since. In 1966 a revised table of channel assignments was adopted for UHF, containing many more educational assignments than before. The new table contains altogether over 615 educational TV assignments in the mainland states, more than a third of all channel assignments.

The first educational TV station to go on the air was KUHT Houston on May 25, 1953. The first state educational TV network was established in Alabama on April 28, 1955.

The commission expects educational TV licensees to make their station facilities available to other local educational institutions, since such assignments are made to serve the educational and cultural needs of the community. Except in particular cases, educational TV eligibility is not extended to municipal authorities in places where an independent educational authority, such as a board of education, is established. Noncommercial educational stations are not required to broadcast a specific minimum number of hours, but educational and commercial TV stations are subject to the same service requirements, such as station separation, antenna height and power.

A 1962 law enabled the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to make matching federal grants of money to build educational TV stations, and a 1967 law extended these benefits to educational radio.

As an aid to educational TV, the commission in 1963 established the Instructional Television Fixed Service, a nonbroadcast service on considerably higher frequencies (2500-2690 mhz) than the broadcast service. An ITFS station at a central point such as a school district headquarters can transmit as many as four programs simultaneously to area schools, where special receivers pick up the programs. Simultaneous transmission capability eases scheduling programs for in-school educational TV, and the ITFS service frees broadcast educational TV for more general programming.

(Many schools have closed-circuit TV systems to link classrooms for instruction, but this is by cable, not broadcast, and it is not regulated by the commission.)

Several colleges, universities and community groups hold TV authorizations on channels not reserved for education, and they operate either on a profit or non-profit basis.

Other Broadcast Activity

International Broadcast.—Under international agreement, certain high-frequency bands are allocated for broadcast between nations.

Authorizations for non-government international broadcast stations in the United States are issued by the FCC. Only five of these international stations are now authorized. A single station uses a number of frequencies between 5950 and 26100 khz, and it may need more than one transmitter because of seasonal considerations and other factors in broadcasting different programs simultaneously to different parts of the world. Three stations are now operating, one is scheduled to go on the air in 1981 and another in 1982. The minimum power for these stations, sometimes known as short-wave stations, is 50 kw.

During World War II, international broadcast stations in the United States were taken over temporarily by the Office of War Information and the Office of Inter-American Affairs of the Department of State, which programed them in the interest of the war effort.

Under the peacetime program of the Department of State, the International Communications Agency broadcasts daily in many languages to other parts of the world through the Voice of America. VOA stations are not licensed or regulated by the FCC. There are about 30 VOA transmitters in the United States and about 70 located in foreign countries.

Broadcast Relay by Satellite.—The first live transatlantic telecast by satellite was relayed by Telstar I on July 10, 1962. The picture was of the American flag fluttering in front of the sending station at Andover, Me. More panoramic telecasts, showing life in widely distant places, were exchanged between the U.S. and Europe 13 days later. Telstar I and other experimental satellites were operated by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which continues to handle the rocket launching of privately operated communication satellites as well as some satellites in government communication and space programs.

The Communications Satellite Act of 1962 provided for the U.S. portion of a global system to be operated by a private corporation, the Communications Satellite Corp., subject to federal regulations. Comsat is owned partly by common carriers and partly by the general public. Early Bird (INTELSAT I) on April 2, 1965, became the first commercial satellite to be put in orbit by Comsat and its foreign partners in the International Telecommunications Satellite Consortium. During the following year, some 80 hours of television were transmitted between the U.S. and Europe. Early Bird has since been replaced and retired.

When INTELSAT II (flight 2) went up over the Pacific on Jan. 11, 1967, satellite communication was established between the U.S. mainland and Hawaii, making live network TV transmission available there for the first time. Still, television makes up only a small part of the traffic on communication satellites around the world. Telephone and teletype communications, including data transmissions, dominate the loads.

Auxiliary Broadcast Services.—Broadcasters take portable or mobile transmitters to the scene of events to relay aural programs back to the station for on-the-spot coverage of sporting events, parades, conventions, fairs, disasters, and other newsworthy events. These remote-broadcast pickup stations use frequencies in the 26, 153, and 450 mhz portions of the spectrum.

TV stations also use small portable transmitters operating in the 2, 7, and 13 ghz-per-second (microwave) portions of the spectrum for visual coverage of out-of-studio events.

Stations may also use transmitters to send TV and aural programs from the studio to the transmitter (studio-transmitter links) and to relay programs between broadcast stations (intercity relay stations). Aural studio-transmitter links and intercity relay stations operate in the 950 mhz portion of the spectrum and TV studio-transmitter links and intercity relay stations in the 2, 7, and 13 ghz portions.

Experimental Broadcast.—Experimental broadcast stations test new techniques and develop broadcast equipment. Information obtained helps the industry to evolve and provides the commission with information about new developments. All the broadcast services (AM, FM, TV,) had their origins in experimental stations, as did UHF television, color television and subscription television.

Note: Dollar volume figures represent total considerations reported for all transactions, with the exception of minority interest transfers in which control of the licensee did not change hands. All sales have been approved by the FCC. Also, prior to 1978, a combined AM-FM facility was counted as one station in computing the total number of stations traded.

*Prior to 1971 figures represent total number of deals involving both radio and television stations. Beginning in 1971, when the FCC's "one-to-a-customer" rule, prohibiting the sale of co-located TV and radio stations, became effective, figures represent the total number of separately located TV and radio stations that were sold in packages.

The TV Marketplace

The ADI Market Atlas

The Area of Dominant Influence is a geographic market design that defines each television market exclusive of the others, based on measurable viewing patterns. Each market's ADI consists of all counties in which the home market stations receive a preponderance of viewing, and every county in the U.S. (excluding Hawaii and part of Alaska) is allocated exclusively to only one ADI—there is no overlap. The estimated television households are therefore additive, and the total of all ADI's represents the total television households in the U.S.

The ADI is a standard market definition. As a television buying tool it is a geographic and demographic means for maximum efficiency. As a station tool it has numerous applications for more effective sales efforts, and for programming and promotion planning.

Following, in alphabetical order, are Arbitron Television's 211 ADI markets for 1981-82 with coverage maps for each county-by-county breakouts of TV households. Other data included the market's stations, and their cities of license, channel numbers and network affiliations. (Networks in parentheses indicate secondary affiliations.)

Coverage maps show total survey areas in white, the ADI's themselves in light crosshatching, and Arbitron Metro Rating Areas in heavier crosshatching. The survey areas consist of all counties in which the home market stations are viewed to any significant extent, including via cable. The Metro Areas, save for an occasional deviation caused by geographical or historical factors, conform to the U.S. Census Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas.

Arbitron has also designated several "supplementary markets"—TV-station home counties where the stations of a different market receive the preponderance of viewing. Supplementary markets therefore do not meet Arbitron's criteria for having an ADI of their own; they are listed in this atlas next to the ADI of which they are a part. (Note—The survey area of a supplementary market usually differs from that of the neighboring ADI market.)

A complete list of the supplementary markets appears on page B-15, and a cross-reference list for cities in a multi-city ADI on B-75.

TV Markets by Nielsen Marketing Research Territory

Nielsen Marketing Research territory groupings are another standard way of reporting sales data. The following table ranks TV markets within each Nielsen Territory. This provides a yardstick for determining the number of spot markets needed to achieve a given coverage of a territory. For example, if the national media are not delivering sufficient advertising weight in New England, the planner will find that three TV markets (Boston, Hartford and Providence) contain more than 80% of the New England territory households. Or, he can use the table to get a better idea of how and what TV markets are needed to cover all of New England. Data is from special Nielsen Station Index tabulation based on a September 1981 estimate.

How Network Delivery Varies by Market

National advertisers use spot television to increase network advertising weight in specific markets to achieve a predetermined level. These market goals are derived from the advertising budget and the market's share of the brand's projected sales. Thus, a spot schedule is usually indicated where a market has an unusually high brand-sales potential, or where the network weight delivered for the brand is below the national average used in planning, or both.

The first factor, market brand potential, varies by product and is difficult to generalize. The second factor, local-market network audiences, must be generalized because planning is based upon next season's anticipated network performance. The prevalence of network "package" buys, which tend to deliver average audience levels, supports the use of average data.

The following tabulation, chosen especially for the BROADCASTING Yearbook, shows Arbitron Television's Areas of Dominant Influence (ADI) in terms of percent of the total number of U.S. TV households. Also given, in like percentage terms, are the network audiences in each ADI market during prime-time hours. It is this market audience figure, when compared to the market's share of population, that indicates whether the network commitment will perform above or below the national plan average in that market.

The figures are based on Arbitron Television's May 1981 Network Program Group Analysis.

Television Billings—1955-1980

Figures for the years 1955 through 1967 are net time sales by stations and networks after all frequency and promotional discounts but before deduction of commissions to agencies and representatives. Figures for 1968 through 1980 were computed under a new formula and represent total amounts paid by advertisers for the use of broadcast facilities. They include commissions paid to advertising agencies and representatives and payments for broadcast time and programs, materials, facilities and services supplied by broadcast stations and networks in connection with the sale of time. Figures are based on FCC data.

American Forces Radio and Television Service

AFRTS operates over 800 radio and television outlets located in more than 20 foreign countries, remote areas of Alaska, U.S. trusts, territories and possessions, and aboard Navy ships. Most of the land-based stations are grouped into regional AFRTS networks to serve specific geographical areas (for example, American Forces Network-Europe in Europe and American Forces Korea Network in Korea). These AFRTS networks and independent stations create their own individual radio and television program schedules from broadcast materials provided by the AFRTS Programing Center in Los Angeles. Some outlets are broadcast operations and some carried on closed circuit systems of various types. AFRTS stations broadcasting in U.S. territory (primarily Alaska and the Pacific), in Canada and in the Caribbean are listed below.

Radio Billings—1955-1980

Figures for the years 1955 through 1967 are net time sales by stations and networks after all frequency and promotional discounts but before deduction of commissions to agencies and representatives. Figures from 1969 on were computed under a new formula and represent total amounts paid by advertisers for the use of broadcast facilities. They include commissions paid to advertising agencies and representatives and payments for broadcast time and programs, materials, facilities and services supplied by broadcast stations and networks in connection with the sale of time. Figures are based on FCC data.

All import statistics are based on average value as published by the U.S. Department of Commerce, which is F.O.B. and therefore excludes U.S. import duties, freight charged from the foreign country to the U.S. and insurance.

Broadcasting/Cablecasting

Yearbook 1982

International

World Radio and Television

The following summarizes radio and television broadcasting around the world. Stations and transmitters used for international and armed forces programs are included. Transmitter counts for each country are for main transmitters and often include low power relays, repeaters, satellites and/or translators. Where current information is not available, radio set counts have been estimated by Broadcasting.

Note: Domestic radio stations in foreign countries often use shortwave and longwave frequencies, as well as the medium wave frequencies corresponding with the standard AM broadcast band in the U.S. Longwave (lw) frequencies below 500 khz are generally used in Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and Asiatic U.S.S.R. Medium wave (mw) frequencies are between 500 and 1600 khz and are used on all continents. Shortwave (sw) frequencies are between 1600 and 30,000 khz and are used for domestic broadcasting on all continents, especially in tropical areas. On long, medium, and shortwave, the mode of transmission is amplitude modulation (AM). Most foreign frequency modulation (FM) radio broadcasting is on the same frequencies as those used in the U.S., although some countries use a band between 60 and 18 mhz.

Unless shown as commercial (com), government broadcasting activity identified below is without advertising. Some independent broadcasting organizations, such as the BBC, operate under statutory authority, and are so identified. Statutory, nongovernmental broadcasting may be supported by receiver license fees, advertising, subsidies, or a combination.

Anatomy of Cable Regulation

An outline of federal cable television rules, including current regulations and developments

Cable television (also called CATV or community antenna television) was developed in the late 1940's in communities unable to receive TV signals because of terrain or distance from TV stations. Cable systems located their antennas in areas having good reception to pick up broadcast station signals and distribute them by cable to subscribers for a fee.

In 1950 cable systems were operating in only 70 communities in the United States; these systems served 14,000 subscribers, i.e., cable television homes. At the beginning of 1982 approximately 4,500 cable systems served more than 22.1 million subscribers in some 10,700 communities. The largest technically integrated system—in San Diego—serves more than 204,000 subscribers.

Cable television systems are operating in every state of the United States and in several other countries, including Austria, Canada, Belgium, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Sweden, and Switzerland. Within the U.S., Pennsylvania has the largest number of cable systems, and California has the largest subscriber population. Although the number of systems in large metropolitan areas is increasing, most cable systems are located in small communities.

Although the average cable system is providing 10 channels of broadcast television and other services, most systems are technically capable of offering 12 or more channels. A few dual-cable systems are capable of offering 70 or more. The average monthly subscriber fee is $9.00 for service; installation fees range from about $100, the average being approximately $17.00.

The channel capacity of cable systems makes it possible for them to provide many services. Many systems feature separate channels for weather, stock market reports, wire service news, FM radio, and movies. Some cable operators originate their own programs and/or provide access channels for use by the public, by educational or local governmental entities, or for leased purposes. Cable operators foresee systems developing into two-way home communications centers through which subscribers may shop for merchandise, order facsimile newspapers, conduct banking-business, and have utility meters read. Many of these services are now technically feasible.

Initial Jurisdiction and Rules

The Federal Communications Commission asserted limited jurisdiction over cable television in 1962, first establishing rules in 1965 for systems which received signals by microwave. (Microwave stations have always been licensed by the FCC.) In March 1966, the Commission established rules for all cable systems, whether or not served by microwave (Second Report and Order in Docket 14895, 2 FCC 2d 724 (1966)). This initial regulation required cable systems to carry all local TV stations; prohibited systems from duplicating, on the same day, via signals originating in another city, a program broadcast by a local station; and prohibited them from bringing distant signals into the 100 major television markets without a hearing on the probable effect on local broadcasting. In all other markets, no restrictions were placed on the signals a cable system might carry, but procedures were adopted permitting threatened stations to challenge proposed importation of distant signals.

Challenged in the courts, the FCC cited its mandate under the Communications Act to regulate "interstate commerce by wire or radio." In June 1968, the Supreme Court affirmed the Commission's jurisdiction over cable. The benchmark case (United States v. Southwestern Cable Co., 392 U.S. 157 (1968)) arose from an interim Commission decision in 1966 which limited the right of San Diego cable systems to carry the programming of Los Angeles stations. The court decided that "the Commission has reasonably concluded that regulatory authority over CATV is imperative if it is to perform with appropriate effectiveness certain of its responsibilities." The court found that the FCC needed authority over cable systems to assure the preservation of local broadcast service and to effect an equitable distribution of broadcast services among the various regions of the country.

On December 13, 1968, the Commission invited comments on a major revision and expansion of its cable rules (Docket 18397). The Commission adopted "interim procedures" for use during the rulemaking proceeding. These procedures included suspension of distant signal hearings, deferral of processing of all petitions or applications seeking authorization of service inconsistent with the proposed signal carriage rules, and grant of carriage requests consistent with the proposed rules.

In March 1971, the Commission held nine days of public hearings on its 1968 rulemaking proposals, as well as on additional proposals issued in July 1970. During the first four days of the hearings, conducted in an experimental panel format, spokesmen discussed contrasting viewpoints, providing direct confrontation and debate. This portion of the hearings was televised nationally. On the remaining days, members of the general public made individual presentations to the Commission.

A general outline of the proposed rules was submitted to Congress on August 5, 1971, in a "Letter of Intent." While the rules adopted six months later generally adhered to those proposals, they were modified to reflect the consensus agreement on exclusivity and distant signal importation reached between broadcast and cable industry groups in cooperation with the FCC and the White House Office of Telecommunications Policy.

The rules the FCC adopted February 2, 1972, which became effective March 31, 1972, were the most comprehensive compilation of regulations ever issued on cable television regulation. (See Cable Television Report and Order, 36 FCC 2d 143 (1972).) Although the Commission has amended the 1972 rules numerous times, the basic framework remains unchanged.

Current Rules

The majority of the FCC rules regulating cable television systems falls into four broad subject areas—signal carriage, Federal-State/local regulatory relationships, nonbroadcast or cablecasting services, and technical standards.

For regulatory purposes, the rules distinguish between the terms "cable television system" and "system community unit." A cable television system is described as a "nonbroadcast facility consisting of a set of transmission paths and associated signal generation, reception, and control equipment that distributes or is designed to distribute to subscribers the signals of one or more television broadcast stations . . ."

Often called the "headend" or "physical system" definition, it is used basically in provisions related to cablecasting, network and syndicated program non-duplication protection exemptions, record maintenance, equal employment opportunity, certain FCC reporting forms, cross-ownership, and technical standards.

The term "system community unit" applies to signal carriage, network program non-duplication protection, and syndicated program exclusivity rules. "System community unit" means a cable TV system, or portion of a cable system, operating within a separate and distinct community or municipal entity, including unincorporated areas.

As a precondition to commencing operation or adding any television broadcast signals to existing operations, a cable system operator must register with the Commission. Effective October 20, 1978, the Commission eliminated the certificate of compliance application process for cable systems and instituted this new procedure. To register, a cable television operator must send the following information to the Secretary of the Commission:

- (1) The legal name of the operator, Entity Identification or Social Security number, and whether the operator is an individual, private association, partnership, or corporation; if the operator is a partnership, the legal name of the partner responsible for communications with the Commission;
- (2) The assumed name (if any) used for doing business in the community;
- (3) The mail address, including zip code, and the telephone number to which all communications are to be directed;
- (4) The date the system provided service to 50 subscribers;
- (5) The name of each separate community or area

- served and the county in which each is located;
- (6) The television broadcast signals to be carried which previously have not been certified or registered; and
 - (7) For a cable system (or an employment unit) with five or more full-time employees, a statement of the proposed community unit's equal employment opportunity program, unless such program has previously been filed for the community unit or is not required to be filed based on an anticipated number of fewer than five full-time employees during January, February, and March of the year following commencement of operation; an explanation must be submitted if no program statement is filed.

The Commission issues a public notice setting forth the details of each registration statement as it is received.

The cable television operator is not required to serve the registration statement on any party and may begin operation or add new signals immediately upon filing the registration statement. However, commencement of operation will be entirely at the risk of the system operator; if violations of the rules are subsequently discovered, appropriate regulatory sanctions, including imposition of forfeiture and the issuance of cease and desist orders, may be employed. The Commission will not systematically review the information to ascertain if the service proposed is in compliance with its rules. Filing a waiver request or including in a registration statement signals whose carriage is not permitted by the rules will not prevent the Commission from imposing sanctions if carriage is commenced in violation of the rules, even if it subsequently were determined that a waiver is appropriate.

Cable systems previously certified (and those with certificates of compliance pending) are considered to be registered. No further filings, other than required annual reports, are necessary until new services are added.

Cable television systems serving at least 50 subscribers but fewer than 1,000, are exempted from most of the Commission's rules. Generally, only the following requirements apply to smaller cable systems:

- (1) Comply with the registration requirements described above;
- (2) Comply with requests from local television stations for carriage on the cable system;
- (3) Comply with the Commission's technical standards for cable television systems (except that annual proof of performance tests are not required);
- (4) Correct and/or furnish information in response to the following forms sent to the cable operator annually by the Commission: (Form 325) "Annual Report of Cable Television System" (Schedules 1 and 2 only); (Form 326) "Cable Television Annual Financial Report"; (Form 395A) "Annual Employment Report."

Small system operators are exempted from maintaining a copy of the FCC's Rules and Regulations and a public inspection file of various records.

Acknowledging that Federal licensing would be an "unmanageable burden" and that the industry was uniquely suited to "a deliberately structured dualism," the Commission adopted a regulatory plan allowing local or State authorities to select a franchisee and to regulate in any areas that the FCC does not preempt. Typically, local governments have adopted laws and/or regulations on franchising, basic subscriber rates, theft of service, taxation, and pole attachment. The Commission preempts local regulation of signal carriage, pay cable, technical quality, and channel use. However, in the areas of technical standards enforcement and channel use, the FCC may authorize local arrangements in some cases.

The only mandatory franchise standard in the FCC's rules limits a franchise fee, the amount the system operator pays annually to the local franchising authority, to no more than 3 percent of the franchisee's gross revenues per year from all cable services in the community. The Commission may approve a fee in the range of 3 to 5 percent if the franchisee shows that it will not interfere with Federal regulatory goals and if the franchising authority justifies it in light of the planned local regulatory program.

As of November 15, 1977, the effective date of the Report and Order in Docket 21002, franchising authorities may assess a fee on all cable revenues, rather than excluding those derived from pay cable and other extra services. If the system community unit was franchised or began operating before March 31, 1972, however, a "grandfathered" fee can be collected until either 15 years from the initial grant of the franchise or the end of the current franchise period, whichever occurs first.

The Commission's franchise standards retain the following nonmandatory recommendations or provisions that local governments might include in the franchise or as part of the franchising process:

- (1) The franchising authority should approve a franchisee's qualifications only after a full public proceeding affording due process;
- (2) Neither the initial franchise period nor the renewal period should exceed 15 years, and any renewal should be granted only after a public proceeding affording due process;
- (3) The franchisee should accomplish significant construction within one year after registering with the Commission and make service available to a substantial portion of the franchise area each following year, as determined by the franchising authority;
- (4) A franchise policy requiring less than complete wiring of the franchise area should be adopted only after a full public proceeding, preceded by specific notice of such policy; and
- (5) The franchise should specify that the franchisee and franchisor have adopted local procedures for investigating and resolving complaints.

The standards also suggest that the franchisee maintain a local business office or agent for handling complaints and provide to each new subscriber notice of the procedures for reporting and resolving complaints. The standards also recommend that the franchisee designate by title the office or official responsible for the continuing administration of the franchise and implementation of complaint procedures.

Television signal carriage depends on the geographic location of the community to be served by a cable system. The 1972 carriage rules set up standards of television service that vary with market size. The touchstone is whether a community is located wholly or partially within a 35-mile radius—called the specified zone—of a commercial TV station licensed to a major or smaller television market, as defined in the Commission's cable television rules.

Certain television broadcast signals are required to be carried by cable systems, if the station requests it. Systems serving communities in major or smaller television markets must carry signals from the following broadcast sources.

All television stations licensed to communities within 35 miles of the cable system community.

Noncommercial educational television stations within whose Grade B contour the system community is located.

Commercial TV translator stations with 100 watts or higher power serving the community of the system and noncommercial translators with 5 watts or higher power serving the community.

Stations whose signals are significantly viewed in the community. The significant viewing standard: for network stations, a minimum 3 percent share of viewing hours and 25 percent net weekly circulation; for independent stations, a minimum of 2 percent share and 5 percent net weekly circulation. One survey per system is acceptable.

All Grade B signals from other small markets (applies to systems serving communities in smaller markets only).

In communities located outside of all markets, cable systems must carry signals from the following sources:

All stations within whose Grade B contour the system community is located.

Commercial translator stations with 100 watts or higher power and noncommercial translators with 5 watts or higher power serving the community.

Stations whose signals are significantly viewed in the community.

All educational stations licensed to communities within 35 miles of the system community.

Cable systems serving fewer than 1,000 subscribers per headend may carry any additional signals. Community units constituting systems serving 1,000 or more subscribers may carry the following complements of signals, depending upon the size of the market in which they are located:

In the first 50 major TV markets—three full network stations and three independent stations;

In the second 50 major TV markets—three full network stations and two independent stations;

In the smaller TV markets—three full network stations and one independent station; and Beyond all television markets—no restrictions as to number or type of television signals.

These signal complements do not reflect any public right to more program diversity in some communities than in others. Rather, they reflect the Commission's television allocations policy which is economically based in that the advertising revenues in densely populated areas can support more TV stations than in sparsely populated areas.

In addition to the authorized complement of signals, cable systems in the major markets may carry two additional independent stations. However, any distant signals that have been imported via microwave relay or satellite to meet the authorized complement must be deducted from the additional signals permitted. The rationale for permitting at least two additional signals in all major markets is that it appears that two signals normally not available in the community of the system is the minimum amount of new service needed to attract a significant number of subscribers and the large amounts of investment capital needed for the construction of new systems.

Cable systems in smaller markets may not import more signals than the specified three networks and one independent authorized; however, under all four sets of carriage rules, a cable system may carry more than the authorized complement if the signals are "local" and do not have to be imported.

Cable systems choosing to carry network affiliates and systems permitted to import one or two distant independent stations may select them from anywhere. Systems permitted to import three distant independents may select them from anywhere as long as one of them is a UHF station.

In addition, a cable system community may carry any commercial UHF station if the system community is located partly or entirely within the station's Grade B contour.

All educational stations within 35 miles of a cable system community located outside of all television markets and all educational stations that place a Grade B contour over the community of a system in a major or smaller market must be carried by the cable system. Also, cable systems serving communities in States where noncommercial educational stations are run by a State agency must carry all such stations. Any additional educational stations may be carried if there are no convincing objections.

The Commission allows carriage, within certain limitations, of late-night programming (midnight to 6 A.M.) of otherwise unauthorized signals. To avoid the problem of joining a program already in progress, a cable system community unit may begin to carry any TV station's late-night programs at the sign-off of the last local "must carry" station or at 1 A.M. in the Eastern and Pacific Time Zones and midnight in the Central and Mountain Time Zones.

Cable system community units may carry network news programs that are not broadcast on any stations carried by the system at any time when no local station is broadcasting a news program. This action increases the network news availability for some cable subscribers.

The Commission rules classify television stations carrying a significant amount (defined as one-third of prime time and one-third of all-day programming) of foreign language, religious, or automated programming as "specialty" stations rather than independent stations for purposes of carriage by cable systems. Therefore, cable system community units may carry them without decreasing the number of independent signals they may carry. To date the Commission has classified 38 stations as specialties. The rules also allow carriage of selected specialty programs, only for their duration.

The Commission places no restrictions on either the carriage of radio stations or cable system origination of radio programming.

Cable television community units serving 1,000 or more subscribers may not carry local sports events broadcast by distant television stations when the events are not broadcast on local television stations. The purpose of this rule is to maintain the integrity of local television sports blackouts. The holder of broadcast rights is responsible for notification of program deletions at least no later than Monday preceding the calendar week during which deletions are desired. Programming from any other television station may be substituted for the deleted program.

Nonduplication protection is afforded a local television network station program when a cable system does not duplicate the same program carried simultaneously on a distant station of the same network. The rationale for the nonduplication rules is that duplication of the local station's programming through carriage of distant signals could economically injure local broadcasters and the service they provide to the public.

All systems serving at least 1,000 subscribers per headend are required to comply with the following general provisions:

Dual Channel Carriage—Whenever a local station's programming is protected, a cable system may carry the local station on the channel reserved for the programming of the more distant duplicating signal. This provision averts the need for a "blackout" channel that would otherwise result.

Zones of Protection—Cable system community units located within fixed mileage zones (35 miles for stations licensed to top-100, or major, television markets and 55 miles for those licensed to smaller markets) of communities to which TV stations are licensed must provide nonduplication protection to those stations.

Translator Stations—These stations located within the predicted Grade B contour of their parent station are entitled to nonduplication protection against the duplicating network programming of stations more than 55 miles away from the cable community. In addition, translators licensed to a cable community need not be blacked out to protect other stations.

Notification—Television stations seeking nonduplication protection must submit their requests to cable systems at least six days before the broadcast of the program to be protected and are required to notify the system of last-minute schedule changes. The First Report and Order in Docket 19995 includes a sample notification form.

Program Overruns—The rules allow a one-hour "grace period" during which nonduplication protection need not be provided.

Same-Day Protection—Stations in the Mountain Time Zone are entitled only to simultaneous rather than same-day nonduplication protection. However a station may be granted more protection by the Commission upon a showing of need.

Significantly Viewed Signals—Cable systems are not required to delete the programming of any station that is significantly viewed, as defined for signal carriage purposes. Thus, the rules do not prohibit cable subscribers from obtaining signals commonly available off-the-air in the cable community. This change in the rules has been stayed, pending judicial review.

The syndicated program exclusivity rules require that a cable system serving a community in the first 50 major markets, upon receipt of notification, cease carrying syndicated programs from a distant signal during a pre-clearance period of one year from the date that they are sold for the first time as syndicated programs in the United States. And a cable system in any major market may not carry a syndicated program to which a commercial TV station, licensed to a designated community in the market, has exclusive rights. However, there are several exceptions to this prohibition for cable systems in one of the second 50 major markets.

When a program is deleted under the syndicated program exclusivity rules, a cable system may substitute programming, not otherwise subject to deletion, from any other television station.

Systems serving fewer than 1,000 subscribers per headend are exempt from these requirements.

Based on the conclusions of an inquiry (Docket 21284) into the economic relationships of cable and broadcasting, the FCC adopted in July 1980 a rulemaking eliminating all limits on the number of broadcast signals a cable system may carry and removed the protection afforded television stations against duplication of the syndicated programming for which they hold exhibition rights.

The rulemaking passed by a 4-3 commission vote, but was immediately challenged by Mallie Broadcasting in the Second Court of Appeals in New York. The court has stayed the FCC decision. Thus, the rules remain in effect until the resolution of the court challenge.

The rules that require that a cable system carry local broadcast signals are also being challenged in 1980. Turner Broadcasting Systems, a cable television programmer, has petitioned the FCC to drop them.

The rules relating to service other than over-the-air broadcast involve channel capacity, access and origination cablecasting, and two-way communications. They apply to all systems having 3,500 or more subscribers per headend.

While the Commission encourages experimentation, the rules preclude local regulation on channel capacity, pay cable, and access channels, except government access channels. Franchising authorities may not require more access channels or more extensive two-way operation without specific Commission authorization. Any system serving fewer than 3,500 subscribers may voluntarily provide access channel space; if so, the system must comply with the FCC's operating rule requirements.

Due to possible confusion with broadcast signals, the FCC recommends that cable operators do not use broadcast call letters to identify cablecast channels. It issued a policy statement October 8, 1976, on problems that could arise from the lack of identification or the method of identifying cablecast channels.

State and local authorities may regulate cable transmissions of data and other nonvideo programming. As a result of the court decision, in NARU v. FCC, 533 F. 2d 601 (D.C. Cir. 1976), the FCC no longer regulates intrastate, two-way, point-to-point nonvideo cable transmissions.

New cable systems having 3,500 or more subscribers must provide a minimum potential capacity equal to 20 television broadcast channels. They also must provide the technical capability for nonvoice return, or two-way, communications. Systems that already possess 20-channel capacity are not required to rebuild to provide two-way channel capacity.

Systems in operation as of March 31, 1972, with less than 20-channel capacity and at least 3,500 subscribers are required to reconstruct by June 21, 1986, to comply with channel capacity requirements.

Since most existing systems have 12-channel capacity, and the Commission does not require a system to rebuild in order to provide additional "must carry" signals, many systems cannot carry all of the required local signals. This problem of "saturated" systems is under examination in a rulemaking proceeding (Docket 21472).

All systems with 3,500 or more subscribers, regardless of market, are required to provide up to four access channels (one each for public, education, government, and leased uses), only if they have sufficient activated channel capacity to do so and there is demand for full-time use of the channels. Otherwise, they are required to provide at least one composite, or combined access, channel. No system is required to rebuild or add converters to provide access channels.

Cable operators are required to have equipment available for public use in the local production and presentation of nonautomated cablecast programs. They also must have rules for use of public and leased access channels on a first-come, nondiscriminatory basis and that prohibits advertising and lotteries on public and education access channels. The Commission recommends that rules for leased channel use prohibit lottery information, but they may allow advertising. On all except government access channels, the FCC requires that the local operating rules permit public inspection of a complete record of names and addresses of anyone requesting access time; the record must be maintained for two years. The Commission places no restrictions on the use of government access channels. Operating rules for public, educational, and leased access programming must be filed with the FCC within 90 days after the operator activates any such channels.

One public access channel must be made available for use without charge. However, cable operators may make reasonable charges for equipment, personnel, and production if the program is not live and is longer than five minutes. Channels for education and government access must be provided free for five years after they are first made available.

The rules prohibit operators from exercising any control over the content of access cablecast programming while at the same time they require operators to adopt their own rules prohibiting the cablecast of obscene or indecent material. A clarification adopted in 1976 emphasized that, in addition to having their own rules, cable operators were responsible for enforcing them.

The requirement that operators prohibit the cablecast of obscene or indecent material was challenged in American Civil Liberties Union v. FCC, No. 76-1695 (D.C. Cir., voluntarily remanded August 26, 1977), on the grounds that it was unconstitutional prior restraint on speech. Before the case was decided, the court, at the Commission's request, stayed the enforcement of the clarification to the extent that it unlawfully restrained the presentation of obscene or indecent matter on cable television and remanded it to the Commission. Thus, clearly the Commission cannot enforce that portion of the access rules at this time.

Less clear is the issue of whether or not the Commission has authority to impose any access requirements on cable operators. Although the rules remain in effect, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Cir-

A short course in cable, 1982

There are 4,500 operating cable systems in the U.S., serving some 10,700 communities. Another 3,700 franchises are approved but not built. Pennsylvania has the most systems (344) and California the most subscribers (2.4 million). Operating systems currently reach about 22.1 million subscribers, perhaps over 62 million people—27% of the nation's TV households. The largest (Cox Cable in San Diego) has about 204,375 subscribers. Some have fewer than 100. American Television & Communications Corp. is the largest multiple system operator (MSO), with more than 1,752,000 subscribers. Industry revenues last year totaled approximately $2.9 billion. Most systems offer 12 channels. Systems constructed after March 1972 must have a minimum 20-channel capacity. The average monthly fee is $9, and the average pay subscriber fee is $10 per month. Costs of laying cable range from $8,000 per mile in rural areas to $12,000 in urban areas and up to $80,000 where underground cable is required. An estimated 3,105 systems originate programming in their own studios, the average for 23 hours weekly. Equipment costs are as low as $30,000 for a small black and white operation and $200,000 for a color studio. Over 1,845 systems (41% of all systems) accept advertising on their local origination channels, with rates from $5 to $400 per 30-second spot. Most cable systems derive less than 5% of their gross revenues from advertising. Pay cable is on approximately 3,000 systems and reaches 7.5 million subscribers in 50 states. Most pay cable operators are reporting close to 38% penetration of their subscriber count. Home Box Office Inc. initiated the first national satellite interconnected pay network Sept. 30, 1975, using transponder time leased on the Satcom satellite. Aside from contracting for packaged pay programs, like HBO, cable operators can lease a channel to a pay program operator or secure their own programming directly from a supplier. Over 38% of all cable systems have ties with broadcast interests, almost 21% with program producers and approximately 13% with newspapers. Many systems have multiple cross-ownership ties.

cuit, in Midwest Video Corp. v. FCC, 571 F.2d 1025 (1978), decided that the access requirements exceeded the Commission's jurisdiction. The U.S. Supreme Court is reviewing this case in response to the FCC's appeal, FCC v. Midwest Video Corp., No. 77-1575, cert. granted, October 2, 1978, 47 U.S. Law Week 3187 (U.S., October 3, 1978). The case was argued January 10, 1979, and a decision is pending this term of the Court. In the meantime, the rules remain in effect until the litigation is complete, due to the appellate court's grant of the FCC's request for a stay of mandate.

A cable system may wish to originate programs with the content subject to its exclusive control. This is called "origination cablecasting." Program distributors or pay cable companies may supply programming to cable operators for this purpose. Operators who originate programming are required to comply with the FCC's rules on cablecasts by candidates for public office, the Fairness Doctrine, lotteries, sponsored identification, and obscene or indecent material.

Cable systems frequently offer pay cable services, on a per-program or per-channel basis, to supplement the basic retransmission service. Included are feature films, sports events of regional or national interest, and entertainment programs specially produced for the cable audience.

Two recent Federal Circuit Court decisions involved the FCC's jurisdiction to regulate pay cable. In Home Box Office Inc. v. FCC, 567 F.2d 9 (D.C. Cir. 1977), cert. denied, the court overturned the FCC's pay cable program content rules because of failure to demonstrate a genuine problem which required regulation. The FCC does not now regulate cable program content.

In Brookhaven Cable TV Inc. v. Kelly, 428 F.Supp. 1216 (N.D.N.Y. 1977), aff'd, 573 F.2d 765 (2d Cir. March 29, 1978), petition for cert. filed, 47 U.S.L.W. 3005 (U.S. July 11, 1978) (No. 77-1845), the court affirmed a lower court finding that FCC preemption of pay cable rates precluded the New York State Commission on Cable Television from regulating such rates. The court found that FCC preemption in this area was clearly asserted and within its jurisdiction.

The latest data indicate that approximately 7.5 million pay cable subscribers are served by more than 3,000 cable systems. Programming is provided by cassettes, common carrier microwave, common carrier multi-point distribution service (MDS), and satellite. Since commencing operation in late 1975, satellite delivery of pay cable programming has proved popular and economical. The cable industry has been the largest single user of satellite receive-only earth stations.

All operators of cable systems serving 1,000 or more subscribers must have a current copy of the Commission's cable television rules. In addition, the operators must maintain locally for public inspection a copy of the franchise, application(s) to the FCC including any petitions for special relief or show cause, FCC annual reports and related documents, and any application for transfer of control of a Cable Television Relay Station that may serve the system.

Furthermore, the operator must maintain for five years in the public inspection file a copy of the records the Commission requires be kept on network program nonduplication private agreements, origination cablecasts by candidates for public office, sponsorship identification, operating rules for access channels, equal employment opportunity, and annual performance tests. These documents must be maintained on file either at the system's local office or another accessible place in the community.

All systems of all sizes must retain for three years all records of subscribers served during the last month of each quarter of operation. This record does not have to be included in the public inspection file, but it must be made available upon request by an authorized Commission representative.

Nondiscrimination rules were adopted shortly following the 1972 Report and Order and have remained largely unchanged, although the Commission recently restructured the regulations to improve their readability and adopted some minor revisions in its Report and Order in Docket 20829 (adopted in November 1978). All operators of cable systems and cable relay stations are required to afford equal opportunity in employment to all qualified persons and are prohibited from discrimination in employment because of race, color, religion, national origin, or sex.

The rules require all cable operators and CARS licensees to establish and maintain programs designed to assure equal opportunity for females, Blacks, Hispanics, American Indians or Alaskan Natives, and Asians or Pacific Islanders in recruitment, selection, training, placement, promotion, pay, working conditions, demotion, layoff, and termination.

In addition, if systems have five or more fulltime employees, they must keep on file with the Commission an up-to-date statement of their equal opportunity program and file any changes to existing programs on or before May 31 of each year. They also must submit an annual employment report (FCC Form 395A). Systems having fewer than five employees are required to submit the 395A Form but not the employment statistics portion of that report. An annual report of EEO complaints, required of all systems, is permitted to be filed in conjunction with the annual employment report.

The Commission sends computer printed forms on the following subjects and asks for verification of their accuracy: (1) Schedule 1 of Form 325 (annual report of cable systems); (2) Form 326 (annual financial report), Schedule 1 of which is preprinted; (3) Form 395A (annual employment report); and (4) for systems with 1,000 or more subscribers, Schedules 3 and 4 of Form 325 (ownership information).

Whenever a change occurs in a system's mail address, operator legal name, or operational status, e.g., it obtains 50 or 1,000 subscribers, the operator must notify the Commission of the change within 30 days. The operator must furnish the following information: (1) operator legal name and type (individual, private association, partnership, corporation), including the EI (Employment Identity) number or the Social Security number (if the company is an individual or partnership); (2) assumed name, if any; (3) mail address; (4) nature of operational status change; and (5) the names of the system communities affected and their FCC identifiers (e.g., CA0001), which are assigned routinely when the system registers with the Commission.

The Commission prohibits cable system ownership by telephone companies within their local exchange areas, by television stations within the same market, by national television networks anywhere in the country, and by television translator stations in the same community as the cable system.

The ban on telephone company ownership was designed to deter anticompetitive and discriminatory practices that evolved from the local telephone company's monopoly position in the community and its ownership of utility poles, which usually carry the distribution cables. This rule does not prevent telephone companies from owning cable systems outside their local exchange area or from providing cable facilities (channel distribution service) on a lease or tariff basis for use by an unaffiliated system. The Commission is presently considering the possibility of permitting joint ownership of cable systems by telephone and cable TV companies in small communities (CC Docket No. 78-219).

The Commission's rule prohibiting certain types of television-cable cross-ownership takes into account the growing role of cable systems as program originators and is designed to ensure vigorous competition among the media and to obtain for the public the greatest possible diversity of control over local mass communications media.

As part of its continuing concern with patterns of media ownership, the Commission investigated whether cable system ownership by radio stations and local daily newspapers should be prohibited. An additional question was whether there should be an upper limit on the number of cable systems owned by a single entity nationally or on a regional basis. The Commission concluded that no rules limiting cable-radio or cable-newspaper cross-ownership were required at present, but it continues to study these issues (Docket 18891).

To assure the delivery of satisfactory television signals to cable subscribers, the Commission requires cable operators to meet certain technical performance requirements. These requirements, however, do not apply to nonbroadcast services (such as access channels), cable TV receivers, frequency allocations within the cable network, "ghosting," and cable carriage of AM and FM programming. In general, the rules require every cable operator to conduct annual performance tests and to use these results to determine whether the system is performing satisfactorily. Systems serving fewer than 1,000 subscribers are subject to the technical standards but are not required to take annual measurements.

The FCC preempts State or local regulation of technical performance requirements to prevent the establishment of nonuniform requirements that might hinder system interconnectability and impede the development and marketing of new cable services and equipment.

As a result of the final report of the Cable Technical Advisory Committee (CTAC), the Commission modified its technical standards (Docket 20765) to allow systems to make technical performance measurements based on headends rather than communities.

In the same proceeding the FCC relaxed several standards for signal levels, clarified frequency standards for converters, and relaxed the frequency tolerance for cable carriage of translator signals.

Major current technical standards questions are (1) standards for signal leakage, (2) frequency channelling plans, and (3) standards for cable compatible receivers. Research in progress on the nature of signal leakage must precede frequency channelling decisions, which in turn must precede standardization of cable compatible receivers.

Cable systems, in addition to providing subscribers with off-the-air signals, also obtain signals, sometimes from hundreds of miles away, through microwave relay stations. Microwave relay service is available from common carriers in many areas, or cable systems may operate their own relay stations licensed in the Cable Television Relay Service (CARS).

The CARS rules also authorize licensing of mobile remote pickup stations for the transmission of programming from the scenes of events outside a studio back to the cable studio or headend, and to provide for the licensing of studio-to-headend link (SHL) stations.

Applicants must use FCC Form 327 when filing for authorization to operate a CARS station.

The CARS rules provide that cable system owners or cooperative enterprises are eligible to be CARS licensees. The service is designed to enable a cable system operator to serve his system. However, the rules add that a CARS licensee also may serve nonaffiliated cable systems based on a cost-sharing, nonprofit arrangement. These arrangements permit the delivery of cable programming where the economics might otherwise prevent a small system from using microwave transmission.

The Commission on an ad hoc basis has permitted noncable operators, primarily educational institutions, to own and operate CARS stations. It also has permitted CARS licensees to serve translators (Docket 20539).

The advent of satellite-earth station transmission capability adds another dimension to microwave communications. The interface between a receive-only earth station and a CARS network now offers greater flexibility in the distribution of programming to cable systems and a relatively inexpensive means of providing a long-haul transmission capability.

In a pending rulemaking proceeding (Docket 21505), expansion of the present CARS band (12.7-12.95 ghz to 12.7-13.20 ghz is being considered.

Other Regulatory Matters

Most systems distribute TV signals through coaxial cable strung on existing poles owned by a telephone or electric utility companies. Cable operators also may set their own poles, place their cable underground, or use transmission facilities or rights-of-way owned or controlled by a utility. Some may use combinations of these arrangements.

Sometimes conflicts arise between cable television and utility companies over pole attachment issues, particularly the rates for use of utility facilities. The Communications Act Amendments of 1978 (P.L. 95-234, approved February 21, 1978) require the FCC to regulate the rates, terms, and conditions for cable TV pole attachments to ensure they are just and reasonable unless a State regulates such factors. The law requires such a State to certify to the Commission that it regulates the rates, terms, and conditions for pole attachments and that it has the authority to consider and does consider the interests of both cable TV subscribers and utility consumers.

The FCC has developed regulations to deal with pole attachment complaints (CC Docket No. 78-144) in States which have not certified their authority to the FCC. Alaska, California, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico, Vermont and Wisconsin have certified to the Commission that pole attachment regulation is within their jurisdiction.

In the Communications Act Amendments of 1978 the Congress also granted the Commission authority to impose monetary forfeitures on cable television systems or CARS licensees found to be in violation of the FCC rules, terms or conditions of a certificate or license, any Commission order, or any provision of the Communications Act.

The FCC may impose forfeitures by issuing either a notice affording an opportunity for hearing or a notice of apparent liability to individuals holding a Commission certificate, license, or other authorization. Prior to the Commission's issuing either of such notices to individuals not holding, nor required to hold, an FCC authorization, the following preconditions are necessary: (1) the Commission must issue a citation of violation, (2) the Commission must provide the opportunity for an interview, and (3) the individual subsequently must engage in the violative conduct described in the citation. The maximum fine per day for each separate offense is $2,000, the total fine not to exceed $20,000 for each notice of liability or hearing. In the case of cable television systems, the Commission must issue any such notice within one year of the offense.

The Commission has recently adopted procedural rules to implement the forfeiture law and has delegated certain forfeiture authority to the Cable Television Bureau.

The Act for General Revision of the Copyright Law (Public Law 94-553, Title 17 U.S.C.), effective January 1, 1978, established for the first time an obligation for cable operators to pay copyright fees for the retransmission of broadcast signals.

According to the provisions of the law, cable operators must pay a copyright royalty fee for which they receive a compulsory license to retransmit radio and television broadcast signals. The fee for each cable system is based on the system's gross revenues from the carriage of broadcast signals and the number of "distant signal equivalents," a term identifying non-network programming from distant television stations carried by the system.

The law requires a cable operator to file semi-annually a statement of accounts, including information about system revenues and signal carriage as well as the royalty fee payment. The amount of the fee is the sum of 0.675 percent of gross revenues for the privilege of carrying distant signal equivalents or fixed rates for the carriage of each signal, ranging from 0.675 percent of gross revenues for the first distant signal to 0.2 percent for the fifth and each additional distant signal equivalent. Systems whose total gross revenues are less than $160,000 for the accounting period pay a reduced fee; systems grossing less than $41,500 are required to pay a flat fee of $15.

The law also requires the establishment of a Copyright Royalty Tribunal, composed of five commissioners, to distribute the royalty fees and resolve disputes among copyright owners and to review the fee schedule in 1980 and every five years subsequently. The Copyright Tribunal also is responsible for revising the rates whenever the FCC amends its carriage rules in a manner that would allow carriage of additional programming from distant stations. Any revision of rates should reflect changes impacting on the copyright owners' property value. The CRT, which collected fees of about $14 million in 1979, raised the rates by 21% in December 1980.

The question of whether copyright fees may be added onto subscriber rates is entirely within the purview of local regulatory authorities.

The U.S. Congress had devoted considerable attention to communications matters in recent years and, in particular, cable television policies. In January 1976, the staff of the Subcommittee on Communications of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives prepared a report on cable television entitled Cable Television: Promise Versus Regulatory Performance.

Under the leadership of Chairman Lionel Van Deerlin (D-Calif.), the subcommittee subsequently held hearing and introduced in H.R. 13015, commonly known as the "Communications Act rewrite." Although hearings were held on the bill no legislative action was ever taken on it. A less ambitious "rewrite" (H.R. 3333) introduced in the spring of 1979, with great hope of passage, made no one happy and Van Deerlin was forced to give up on it. Van Deerlin and the subcommittee narrowed their interest to common carrier matters and introduced H.R. 6121 later that year, but after it was approved by the Subcommittee's parent committee, Commerce, it was intercepted on the way to the House floor by the Judiciary and a vote was never taken on it. Van Deerlin was defeated in his bid for reelection in November 1980, but its expected that the subcommittee, now under the leadership of Timothy Wirth (D-Colo.), will continue to push for new communications legislation in 1980.

The Senate has also been active in trying to reform the communications act. A bi-partisan group of senators introduced early last summer S. 2827, which affects broadcasting and cable. Although the bill founded in 1980, Senator Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), a co-sponsor of the bill and the new chairman of the Senate Communications Subcommittee, has indicated that new legislation will be pushed and that S. 2827 will be the crux of it.

A wide variety of laws and regulations for cable television exist at the state level. Eleven states regulate cable television on a comprehensive basis through a state agency. In Massachusetts, Minnesota, and New York, these agencies are special commissions established for the sole purpose of cable television regulation. In Alaska, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey,

Rhode Island, and Vermont, the agencies are state public utility commissions. In Hawaii, regulation of cable television is the responsibility of the Department of Regulatory Agencies. In addition, at least 30 other states have one or more laws specifically applicable to cable television, dealing most commonly with such subjects as franchising, theft of service, pole attachment, rate regulation and taxation.

Citizen Participation In FCC Regulation

The Commission encourages meaningful input from the public. The FCC's rules provide for public participation in all phases of its regulatory proceedings. Persons who wish to participate but are unfamiliar with the procedures may contact the Consumer Assistance Division, Room 258, FCC, 1919 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20554 (telephone [202] 632-7000). All filings should be mailed or delivered to Secretary, FCC, 1919 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20554.

Any member of the public may participate in the Commission's regulatory proceedings. These may involve petitions for waivers of the rules or other special relief, show cause requests, or rulemaking matters.

The Commission's Public Information Division releases public notices of filings of registration statements and petitions for special relief, orders to show cause, or rulemaking. Since the FCC does not maintain a mailing list for public notices, several commercial distributors are available for this purpose. A list of these distributors is available from the Public Information Division. Another source of this information is from trade publications, including, for example, Broadcasting and Television Digest. The Cable Television Bureau's Public Reference Room located at 2025 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C., 6th Floor, maintains files of the Commission's public notices on these cable matters.

A cable system operator, broadcaster, or any other person may seek special relief or a waiver of any rule at any time. As a result, the Commission may waive an existing rule, impose different requirements, or clarify a disputed question.

The filing of a registration statement commonly provides an opportunity for opposition through a petition for special relief. Anyone may file oppositions or supporting comments to such statements. For example, a member of the general public or a broadcaster who objects to a cable operator's carriage of a particular broadcast signal may petition for special relief.

A petitioner may submit the request by letter, accompanied by certification that all parties who may be directly affected by any Commission action have been given a copy of the request. In addition to stating the relief requested, the petition should contain the facts demonstrating the need for relief and show how granting the request would serve the public interest. An original and two copies of the petition must be filed with the Secretary of the Commission.

Any person may submit comments or opposition to the petition within 30 days after it is filed. These pleadings also must be served on the petitioner and all persons listed in the petitioner's certificate of service, and an original and two copies should be submitted to the Secretary.

The Commission's issuance of an order to show cause begins a proceeding similar to a civil suit for an injunction; if the complainant prevails at the hearing, the FCC issues a cease and desist order. Such a proceeding may be started by filing an original and two copies of a petition for issuance of an order to show cause, which the Commission subsequently places on public notice.

Such petitions usually seek to remedy an alleged violation of the Commission's rules. A copy of the petition should be sent to the cable system operator and other parties. It is possible, however, for an individual or group to join a cable system in opposing a request for an order to show cause. Once all the pleadings have been submitted, the FCC reviews the arguments and determines whether an order to show cause should be issued.

The Commission is continually in the process of adopting new rules or amending old ones. Since many of these rules have widespread impact, the public may wish to participate.

Anyone may petition the FCC to adopt a rule at any time. A petition should include the text or substance of the proposed rule and provide supporting views, arguments, and data.

The rulemaking process usually begins with the FCC's issuance of a "Notice of Proposed Rulemaking." As the name implies, such a notice proposes new or amended rules and invites public comments within a specified time period—usually 30 days or more. The notice is published in the Federal Register, which is available in major libraries. Trade publications also generally report the issuance of a rulemaking notice.

Following consideration of the comments, the Commission generally issues a "Report and Order" amending its rules and terminating the proceeding. Within 30 days after publication of the item in the Federal Register, anyone may petition the Commission for reconsideration of its decision.

The rules require that an original and five copies of all petitions and comments be filed. Participants who wish each Commissioner to have a copy may submit 12 copies (an original and 11 copies). Members of the public may participate informally in rulemaking proceedings by submitting a single copy (the original) of a document, which will be placed in the official docket file.

Actions Alert, a weekly summary of rulemaking decisions, is available free of charge for public interest groups. For a mailing list application or further information about this publication, write or call the Public Information Division, telephone (202) 632-7260.

The Cable Complaint Service of the FCC's Cable Television Bureau functions to resolve problems involving cable systems. Its services include (1) attempting to clear up misunderstandings between subscribers (and/or State and local governments) and cable systems on Commission rules; (2) dealing with complaints about a system's service; and (3) helping local governments to structure complaint procedures.

The Service attempts to resolve disputes on an informal basis; where merited, however, it may request that an FCC investigation be conducted and/or may start formal legal action.

Under the dual jurisdictional approach exercised by the Commission and State and local authorities over cable television, several important areas of consumer concern are administered by local bodies instead of the FCC. These include subscriber rates and installation fees, inaccurate bills and questionable billing practices, damage to property, illegal taps, extension of cable service to individual homes and businesses, repairs, improper wiring, and false or misleading advertising concerning the cable system's capabilities. Complainants are urged to make their complaints by letter, directed to local officials responsible for regulation of their cable system.

The Cable Complaint Service is interested particularly in technical quality and interference problems. However, knowing the origin of the problem is the first step in determining where to direct a complaint. For example, if a broadcast TV station carried by the cable system experiences frequent outages or distortions, the complaint should be filed with the Complaints and Compliance Division of the FCC's Broadcast Bureau. Interference generated by Citizens Band or Amateur radio operations should be addressed to the Commission's Field Operations Bureau. Problems involving Master Antenna Systems (MATV) should be directed to consumer groups or other community organizations, since such operations are not regulated by the Commission.

Complaints related to FCC cable regulations may be filed by writing to the Complaints and Information Branch, Cable Television Bureau, Federal Communications Commission, 2025 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20554, or by calling (202) 632-9703. A copy of the complaint should be sent also to the manager of the cable company. Unless otherwise advised, complaints and all other correspondence will be available for public inspection.

How To Obtain The Rules

Every cable operator serving 1,000 or more subscribers is required by the FCC to have an up-to-date copy of the Cable Television Rules and Regulations (47 CFR Part 76) and to keep track of Commission actions that might alter them. These rules are available in loose leaf form on a subscription basis through the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Changes in the rules are forwarded to subscribers within a few months after their adoption by the Commission, without additional charges. To order, request Volume XI of the FCC Rules and Regulations, August 1976 edition (subscription price: $17).

Another means of keeping informed of rule changes is through the Federal Register, published daily by the Office of Federal Register and distributed by the U.S. Government Printing Office. A yearly subscription to the Federal Register is $75 (Catalog No. GS 4-107). The Office of Federal Register also publishes an annual cumulation of the rules as Code of Federal Regulations, Title 47, Parts 70-79. This publication is revised as of October 1 of each year; the current edition (1980) is available in paperback from the above address for $8.50 (Catalog No. GS 4-108-47 Parts 70-79).

Cable TV Systems in the United States and Canada

Key to the Listings

Listed in this directory are all the cable television systems and franchise holders in the United States and Canada. Each is listed under the principal community of service, by state or province.

Shown to the right is a sample listing, with explanation of information keyed to the boldface numbers.

(1) Name of system, local address, zip code and telephone.

(2) Personnel and attorney.

(3) Area served: Springfield is the principal community; the system also serves nearby Paris borough and Twillham township.

(4) County in which the service area is located.

(5) Type of TV market. According to FCC rules a CATV system is within a TV market if any part of the system falls within 35 miles of a commercial TV city-of-license. There are three locational categories: Top-100 markets; "smaller TV markets," i.e. any community with a commercial TV station not in the top 100; and, third, locations outside all TV markets. Systems outside a market may still be required to offer nonduplication protection if they fall within 55 miles of a city-of-license.

(6) Statistical data: total number of subscribers; homes passed by the system; total homes in the communities served (where this figure is not available, population is given); date the system began; length of plant; cost to the subscriber for installation and monthly service; and fee the community levies on the cable company (usually a percentage of gross revenue). In states with an across-the-board fee, the fee appears under the state heading.

(7) Summary of system, showing number of channels used for each service. Total capacity is that of the distribution system. Pan-State has 27 channels. Twelve are used for TV carriage; one for pay cable (which carries high-quality programming at an additional charge); two for automated services, such as weather and news data; four for public access programming; two for any other programming originated by the cable system. Two channels are unavailable for use for technical reasons, such as co-channel interference. The remaining four channels are available, but not in use. Channel converters capable of handling more than 12 nonpay channels are in place in subscribers' homes. The system also supplies allband FM service. (If the system carries selected radio, rather than allband, the number of AM and FM stations is shown.)

(8) TV stations carried by the system, including for each: call letters, station's city of license, broadcast channel, cable channel and affiliation (independent and ETV stations and stations that program in a foreign language are also indicated). If the cable channel designation is not available or not applicable (due to set-top converter design, for example), "na" is used. If the station is not picked off the air but brought in by common carrier microwave, it is indicated by "cc"; if by private CARS (community antenna relay service), it is shown by "p." The hypothetical Pan-State system carries 12 TV stations, but only three examples are given:

WOF-TV—licensed in Springfield, broadcasts over the air on channel 2, carried on cable channel 2, an ABC affiliate.

KQSL—UHF channel 20, carried on channel 3, independent, brought in by CARS.

CNTV—from Canada, channel 5 carried on cable channel H, programming in French, a CBC affiliate, brought in by common carrier.

(9) Common carrier microwave company (shown for systems that use the service).

(10) Pay cable. Where a cable system provides pay cable service, a solid square (■) highlights the pertinent information: the channel on which pay programming is carried, the program supplier, type of programming and hours per week offered. Data also includes total pay subscribers (figures are estimated for nonreporting systems), number of homes to which pay service is available and monthly subscriber cost above that charged for regular cable service.

(11) Automated origination. Cable channel B carries a news ticker around the clock; channel C carries time and weather, with FM station WQSL as background music, for 105 hours per week.

(12) Access channels. In larger markets the FCC requires that channels be available for programming by persons other than the cable operator. Channels are assigned to the general public, educational institutions and local government; Channels may also be leased by private parties. The sample listing shows the cable channels and hours of programming per week for each function.

(13) Other origination. Includes nonautomated, nonaccess programming, such as local live, video tape, and film; CATV network; round-the-clock movies. The listing shows channel designation and hours per week.

(14) System accepts advertising (on local origination or automated channels), with yearly revenue shown.

(15) Other services offered by the system. "Two-way capability" indicates the distribution system is equipped to handle subscriber-to-headend signals. Special radio services (distant imported signals, shortwave, etc) are also shown.

(16) Ownership. If a multiple system operator (MSO) owns the system in part or in whole, reference is made to the MSO directory which is on page G-369 of this section, lists the particulars for persons and companies with interest in three or more cable operations. (Canadian MSO's are listed in the following directory.). Attorneys and headquarters addresses and other interests may appear here, rather than under the individual system's listings. If a cable owner has broadcast interests, reference is made to the "Broadcasters in Cable" directory which is in Section A of this book.
